

April 06 What's happening now?

Work continues, even though we were paid a brief visit by a fellow called Larry!

We were among the fortunate, with no damage, no loss of equipment or materials. The power went out, but not for long. Only a few days after Larry, workers were back on site. The people of North Queensland are resilient.

Sediment prevention measures were effective, and we were prepared, but not looking forward to the rain. Although the roadworks have not finished we are delighted with the fact that Avondale Creek was not compromised in any way.

Avondale Creek runs crystal clear, in the estate. Living in Canopy's Edge Estate puts exploring this adventure at your doorstep.

A mighty effort in planting continues. The 'drainage reserves' look more and more like the green corridors that they will become. They are planted out with native species that have delighted in the tropical wet. Our nursery continues to thrive, and while Larry scattered some of the pots, none were lost. It was a simple matter to right the plants and life goes on.

Bigger changes are just around the corner. The landscaping of the estate will soon commence and the sales office is almost completed. We look forward to being fully operational in a few weeks.

House and land packages have been put together by Cairn's Award Winning Builders. Interest in the estate has been keen, from people who want to call Canopy's Edge "home", to the builders who want to build a quality product on site for their clients. We are able to put you in touch with those builders, just contact us at sales@canopysedge.com.au and we'll be happy to help.
